A message from An Taoiseach

On 16th May 1926, our founders gathered in La Scala Theatre, Dublin. The meeting was chaired by Countess Markiewicz and addressed by Eamon de Valera, both veterans of the Easter Rising.

The La Scala meeting took place a decade after Patrick Pearse and James Connolly had brought together the republican and labour movements in revolutionary pursuit of Irish national self-determination. Fianna Fáil The Republican Party was established to vindicate the aims of the 1916 leaders.

The vision of the men and women who founded Fianna Fáil was of:

- an Ireland united, independent and at peace;
- an Ireland that is equal and fair;
- an Ireland that is prosperous
- an Ireland that provides for all its people, young and old.

That vision remains our vision today.

With Fianna Fáil fast approaching the centenary of its foundation, it is both timely and appropriate that we have completed a comprehensive review of our aims and objectives to ensure that they reflect modern political realities and the twenty-first century republic in which we live.

This review, ably led by James Lawless TD, has involved members at every level of our organisation and has been informed by a large volume of submissions and an extensive party-wide consultation process. The result is a new set of aims and objectives for Fianna Fáil which we can all be proud. These aims and objectives reaffirm our republican values and renew our commitment to a better Ireland for all our people in a new era.

Uachtarán Fhianna Fáil

Introduction by James Lawless TD

Fianna Fáil is an Irish republican party in the tradition of Tone and Emmet. Under the inspiring leadership of our founders, Fianna Fáil earned and enjoyed the trust of the Irish people for almost a century.

We are determined to retain that trust by reflecting the values and aspirations of the Irish people across our shared and changing island.

In doing this, our goal is to ensure that our party will be a driving force into the next century and beyond.

Change remains the only constant, and it is imperative to continually challenge ourselves as well as others, to ensure our mission remains relevant and robust for the world we live in today.

Our aims were first articulated at the party's foundation and largely aligned with the democratic programme of the first Dáil. That vision was progressed under Lemass paving the way for economic progression and the development of free trade and inward investment; an economic model based upon the knowledge economy which remains key today. Our aims were revisited again in the 1990s, principally to envisage an agreed Ireland by consent, and the Good Friday Agreement which followed.

I was honoured to be tasked by An Taoiseach, Micheál Martin TD, last autumn with again modernising those aims for today and tomorrow. These have been developed over the past twelve months, following intensive consultation and engagement with every level of the party, including every CDC, and indeed with valued external experts, advocates, and supporters. Ultimately it is the people of this Republic whom we serve.

I want to thank and acknowledge the diligence, application and imagination of all commission members in this exercise and also to the many members and units of the organisation who shared their thoughts, views and visions with us across the many meetings and submissions we received.

I believe that these aims remain true to our party's ethos whilst representing a modern blueprint for governance in the 21st century. They capture the challenges of today whilst anticipating the future.

We stand, as always, on core values; the need to continue driving progress whilst protecting the more fragile parts of society; the desire to unite our island in a way that welcomes all communities, including those who have more recently come to these shores.

The imperative of re-imagining our lands and seas to reap a harvest of energy independence and food security - providing valuable new workstreams for rural and farming communities and wider economic opportunity to share those resources onwards - all in renewable, sustainable ways.

We believe in housing as a fundamental right and the dignity of one's own front door. We strongly support the aspiration to home ownership for all and will work to deliver on that commitment. We back the delivery of a diverse housing sector market by ensuring availability of affordable and quality accommodation and by protecting those in rental accommodation through security of tenure and fair rents.

We believe work must always be rewarded and enterprise encouraged; it provides the foundations on which all other progress is made possible. Education remains a core value which we are proud to champion, being the channel through which so many can advance, realise their full potential, and ensure the next generation has a better future. Research and innovation are also key to that journey.

We prioritise strong public services, with continuous innovation and improvement. They should be designed around the user, not for the institution. Healthcare is a basic need in its many forms.

It is key to the social contract that government must work for our people. We strive to vindicate that charter across these aims. We believe in agile and liberal democracy and historical republican values.

We are passionate believers in the European project and in further enlargement and cooperation.

We are steadfast in our support for democracy and the fundamental freedoms of a modern republic. We are alert to the multiple and disparate threats that today face nation states, corporations, and individuals. Our democracy is fragile and must be defended robustly. This defence extends from civic freedoms to national security.

Our party has always supported initiative whilst protecting the vulnerable. The greater good of society and the nation must always take precedence. Over our history we have led out on social and economic progress and worked to ensure no family was left behind.

Our party aligns to a 'left of centre' philosophy which is reflected throughout this document. We believe this position holds true both to our history and our future.

It is my privilege to have led this project and I present our outputs below. This is not a policy manifesto, nor is it a detailed plan for implementation. This provides the foundations on which all that can follow. This is at once simpler and yet more profound. It is a statement of our core goals and mission.

I commend it to this Ard Fheis.

Fianna Fáil

An Páirtí Poblachtach

Páirtí forásach agus poblachtánach is ea Fianna Fáil, a d'eascair as gluaiseacht náisiúnta chun poblacht neamhspleách a bhaint amach agus Éire a aontú. Tá an páirtí bunaithe ar an bpobal, ar son na fiontraíochta tiomanta don cheartas sóisialta, ailínithe le daonlathas liobrálach Eorpach mar aon le luachanna clasaiceacha poblachtánacha na saoirse, an chomhionannais agus an bhráithreachais.

Fianna Fáil

The Republican Party

Fianna Fáil is a progressive republican party, born out of a national movement to achieve an independent republic and unite Ireland. The party is grounded in the community, pro-enterprise and committed to social justice, aligned with European liberal democracy and the classic republican values of liberty, equality and fraternity.

Fianna Fáil

The Republican Party

Fianna Fáil is a progressive republican party, born out of a national movement to achieve an independent republic and unite Ireland. The party is grounded in the community, pro-enterprise and committed to social justice, aligned with European liberal democracy and the classic republican values of liberty, equality and fraternity.

From Fianna Fáil's foundation, our party has committed itself to a practical republicanism that is focused on raising the standard of living for ordinary people and showing that Ireland could overcome any barriers to its progress.

Eamon de Valera led Fianna Fáil into government for the first time in March 1932 and what followed were major advances for Irish sovereignty and significant improvement in our social and economic life.

Reflecting the party's compassionate left of centre perspective, Fianna Fáil put in place the foundations for the Irish welfare state, so as to offer a safety net to our most vulnerable citizens. Once in government, Fianna Fáil introduced unemployment assistance and increased the old age pension and commenced the slum clearance and social housing projects. Perhaps, de Valera's outstanding legacy was Bunreacht na hÉireann, a constitution that has stood the test of time and which enshrines the freedoms and liberties we enjoy as a people. It is a document all the more remarkable for being authored at a time when the clouds of oppression and dictatorship were descending across Europe.

Fianna Fáil, under the leadership of Seán Lemass, the politician most associated with Irish economic success, implemented the First Programme for Economic Expansion which opened up our economy, encouraged foreign direct investment and set our country on a path of significant growth.

The education and welfare of Irish people has always been a core value of our party and the Fianna Fáil governments of the 1960s used our enhanced economic status as an engine to drive social inclusion. In this decade, free secondary school education was introduced by Donogh O'Malley and the Free Travel Scheme for our older citizens was introduced by Charles Haughey.

In 1973, under the leadership of Jack Lynch, Ireland joined the European Economic Community (EEC), a decision that has brought massive economic and social benefits to our nation and has established an enduring bond with our European neighbours. We are passionate believers in the European project and our place at the heart of Europe.

As Taoiseach, Charles Haughey was central to the emergence of the modern peace process. In 1993, the Downing Street Declaration was driven, negotiated and then signed by Albert Reynolds on behalf of the Irish Government. Building on this work, Bertie Ahern was a key player in a lasting peace settlement, the Good Friday Agreement, being reached. This has proved to be a game changer for peace and economic and social progress on our island. Brian Cowen, as Taoiseach, continued our party's dedication to peace and he and Brian Lenihan did their utmost in the face of a major global recession.

Micheál Martin was elected Taoiseach in the midst of the Covid pandemic. Our Taoiseach has shown tenacity and political skill in leading our country through this crisis. In July 2022, Ireland's unemployment rate fell to its lowest level in 21 years, which signifies a dramatic turnaround from the depths of Covid when almost a third of the labour force was without work.

We are determined to meet the challenges of the decades ahead with the same energy, determination and imagination and to keep leading our country forward.

Unity

To secure in peace and harmony the unity of Ireland and all its people, including those who have chosen to make Ireland their home, harnessing the full potential of the Good Friday Agreement and building consensus around a shared island.

Peace, reconciliation and unity by consent are core values for Fianna Fáil. We are proud of our record in achieving an unmatched series of historic breakthroughs. In recent decades, our party created the conditions for the ceasefires and showed incredible leadership in bringing about the Good Friday Agreement and securing its ratification. We are committed to harnessing the Agreement's full potential to work together, across all communities, for a shared, reconciled future. We believe the complexity and totality of relationships across Ireland now goes further and deeper than ever and we welcome the integration of diverse peoples and minority communities into the rich tapestry that now makes up our shared island.

Teanga, Dúchas & na hEalaíona

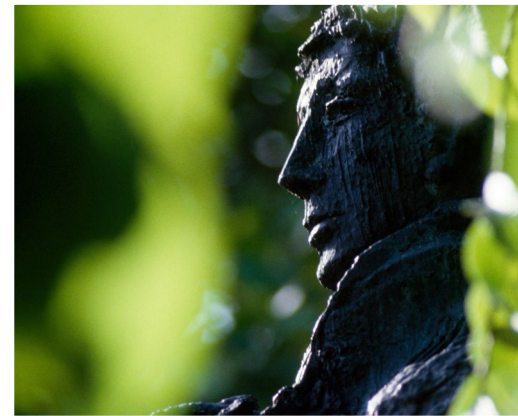

To promote excellence in the Arts and sustainable livelihoods for those working within it, to cherish our unique heritage and to share this with the world with a special emphasis on the development of Irish as a living language. Fianna Fáil will always promote the Irish language.

Fianna Fáil has always viewed the Irish language as an invaluable cultural asset and we will continue to actively support Gaeilge as a vibrant, living language of the people and an integral part of our national life. We cherish our island's shared history, music and literary talents, our sporting traditions and talent. We will promote excellence in the Arts, welcoming both current and future technologies within creative practice, to ensure access to high quality arts education and engagement for all, to enable a sustainable livelihood for artists working in our creative and cultural industries, and to treasure our rich, diverse and evolving heritage.

Community & Meitheal

To foster a spirit of Meitheal by nurturing an inclusive republican citizenship, built on equal rights and opportunities, grounded in strong, empowered communities and encouraging civic engagement across the island.

Meitheal is the uniquely Irish sense of solidarity among neighbours and looking out for each other. It is that sense of community activism that underpins great organisations like the GAA and Tidy Towns and local events such as Parkruns and Festivals. While government has an important role in protecting the people, our society can only truly flourish when citizens play an active part in shaping it. In turn, Fianna Fáil will do everything it can to encourage active participation in our society and in our democracy, making it open, accessible and engaging to all. We want to nurture an inclusive republican citizenship built on equal rights and opportunities for everyone on this island, eliminating all forms of discrimination and we believe that a strong community spirit is essential to Ireland's success.

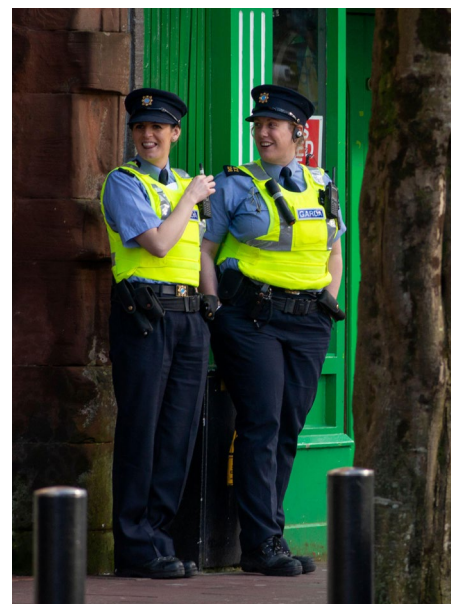

Strong Public Services

To ensure the delivery of universal healthcare and all fundamental public services to the highest standard through investment, innovation and reform; and to guarantee universal access based on need, regardless of means.

We believe that all public services should, first and foremost, work for the user, rather than for the institution. Continuous improvement, technology adoption and a culture of delivery excellence should be core across all such systems. Healthcare uniquely protects and nurtures our people through all stages and Fianna Fáil will work towards a single tier, high quality, universal access, health system which proactively supports mental as well as physical health. We want to make our country fully inclusive of the needs of people with disabilities. We are committed to building a childcare system that is affordable, practical and educational.

Defending Our Democracy

To protect Ireland, its people, its physical and digital assets, from threats at home or abroad. To defend our democracy, recognising freedom of the press, respect for the rule of law, free and fair elections, and informed public debate as fundamental tenets of a modern republic.

Ireland in Europe & the World

To advance Ireland's position and influence as an engaged member of the European Union, promoting increased cooperation and enlargement, and to support the work of the United Nations with a strong focus on the defence of human rights and international development.

A Home for All

To champion the right to housing by providing quality affordable, public and private homes, protecting those renting and supporting those with an aspiration of home ownership.

Fianna Fáil has a proud tradition of building homes and will continue to champion the right to a home. We believe that everybody should have access to good-quality housing to purchase or rent at an affordable price. Supporting home ownership is a core objective of our party. We must significantly increase the availability and supply of housing and we believe that the State has a fundamental role in enabling the delivery of new homes, public and private. We will seek to increase the supply of affordable accommodation for those seeking to rent while also enhancing tenant certainty and security. We recognise the dignity and security that flows from holding the key to your own front door and the benefits of well planned communities.

Education

To provide an education accessible to all, which cherishes all children and promotes inclusivity, equality of opportunity and lifelong learning, advancing research and innovation.

For Fianna Fáil, education is the great enabler. Our party has always been deeply committed to an inclusive education system and we are especially proud of Fianna Fáil's role in introducing free secondary education, the single most progressive public policy initiative of any Irish government. Ireland is today home to many of the world's largest corporations, and we are a global leader in cutting-edge research. We achieved this through innovation and policies that prioritised education. Fianna Fáil will ensure that education will remain as the foundation stone for Ireland's future economic and social progress. We believe education is the best way to tackle inequality and to provide equality of opportunity for all. It is central to our economic model, which is built on a highly skilled workforce, attracting investment, embracing technologies and creating new businesses.

Rewarding Enterprise

To promote enterprise and innovation, to generate employment, to reward hard work, to value aspiration and initiative, so as to improve the standard of living of all our people.

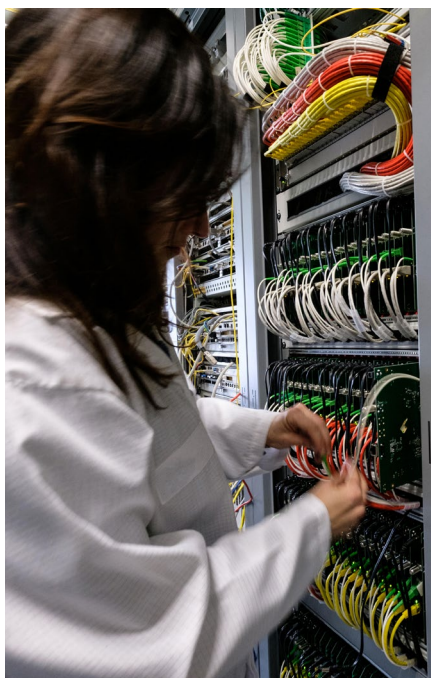

Our economy can only grow and prosper if we have profitable and sustainable businesses that provide high-quality, well-paid employment.

In the late 1950s, Seán Lemass set out a radical plan to attract foreign investment into Ireland. In the period since then, the policies that have evolved from that plan have proved spectacularly successful and Ireland is now home to some of the world's largest and most innovative companies. As a small trading nation, foreign direct investment will always be central to our economic success; we must apply the same sustained political commitment and policy focus to building productivity and innovation across our domestic sector. Our goal is to create a business environment that values hard-work, entrepreneurship and supports the development of an innovative indigenous business sector.

Building the Future

To modernise and expand Ireland's physical and digital infrastructure to meet our future environmental, demographic and economic needs.

Continuous investment in our infrastructure is critical to enable economic and social growth, embrace technical advances, improve our efficacy and deliver better public realm to the citizen. From rural electrification in the 1940s to the motorway programme of the 2000s, to the new maritime development framework, Fianna Fáil have consistently built the backbone for social, economic, energy and engineering advances. We will construct housing, roads, railways, transit, ports, internet & telecoms, renewable energy installations, eGovernment and much more. We believe capital spending on infrastructure projects equips the state and our people with the foundations on which to build, connect, travel and trade.

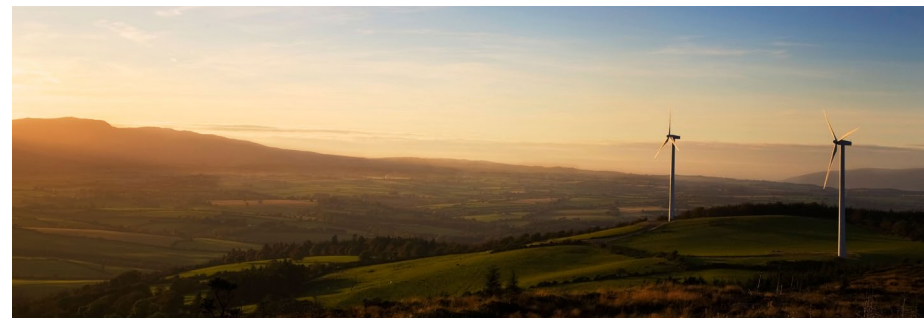

Climate Action & Biodiversity

To rise to the challenge of climate change by restoring and conserving our biodiversity and natural heritage, embracing renewable energy and ending the use of fossil fuels via a just transition to a sustainable society and circular economy.

The biggest challenge faced by our generation and future generations is climate change. Fianna Fáil is committed to putting sustainability and respect for our natural environment and built heritage at the core of all public policy, enabling a just transition to a carbon neutral society and economy. We will maximise the potential of our coastline to make Ireland a renewable energy superpower, creating employment and economic opportunities in regional areas while also driving our emissions down to zero. We will deliver on new, more sustainable forms of public transport to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and we will reward our farmers for protecting biodiversity and enhancing habitats.

A Sustainable Island

To grow an all-Ireland economy as the clean, green engine of Europe, harnessing our land and seas to achieve energy independence and food security, and, in so doing, to develop new sustainable opportunities for the rural, farming and maritime economies.

The natural resources of the twenty-first century are in the skies and seas around us and the power they convey. We believe in the harnessing of renewable energy and the attendant potential to reinvent and revitalise coastal and rural communities as we develop this new and clean new industry. We recognise the urgency of food security and the desirability of looking to our own island first for produce. Our fertile soil and surrounding seas should be cultivated in a sustainable fashion. An all-island approach enhances all such outputs and enables economies of scale where the whole can be so much greater than the sum of all the parts.

Defending Our Democracy

To protect Ireland, its people, its physical and digital assets, from threats at home or abroad. To defend our democracy, recognising freedom of the press, respect for the rule of law, free and fair elections, and informed public debate as fundamental tenets of a modern republic.

Our democracy was hard won and can never be taken for granted. Across the world we see autocracies, populism and dictatorships on the rise. We have a responsibility to the State and our citizens to defend our freedoms, borders and assets. Disinformation, cyber, maritime and hybrid offensives all pose new, real and growing threats. We believe in the fundamental rights of a modern Republic, freedom of speech, free and fair elections, a free press and academic freedom, an independent judiciary and respect for the rule of law. We must safeguard these fundamental values.

To advance Ireland's position and influence as an engaged member of the European Union, promoting increased cooperation and enlargement, and to support the work of the United Nations with a strong focus on the defence of human rights and international development.

Fianna Fáil has supported Ireland's membership of the European Union from the outset. This has delivered enormous benefits for peace and prosperity on the island of Ireland and this is again evidenced in the solidarity throughout Brexit. Our party will continue to play a principled and dynamic role at the centre of the EU through its next stage of development. We support closer cooperation and enlargement. Our support for multilateralism and respect for the rule of law is also central to our political identity. Fianna Fáil is committed to advancing the UN Sustainable Development Goals. Fianna Fáil is internationalist in perspective and will work with the UN and other agencies in defending human rights and international development aid.
